Neckartenzlingen, 08 September 2015 – Networked cars, invisible antennas, Internet TV in the passenger seat and "Smart City" technologies: These are just some of the pioneering innovations being developed at Hirschmann Car Communication in Neckartenzlingen, near Stuttgart, Germany. Being part of this is an exciting challenge – especially for young men and women. Alicea Paul (18) from Neuffen, Sarah Filip (21) from Weilheim-Hepsisau, Lukas Kübler (20) from Nürtingen and Jennifer Gauss (20) from Riederich are the latest additions to the Hirschmann team and they, too, are excited at this prospect. Alicea will begin her training as a mechatronics engineer, Sarah and Lukas as electronics engineers for devices and systems, while Jennifer will be completing the practical part of her Management in Industry in the Business Administration degree programme at the Duale Hochschule Stuttgart [Baden-Wuerttemberg Cooperative State University Stuttgart] at Hirschmann Car Communication.

Start their training at Hirschmann:
Lukas Kübler, Alicea Paul, Sarah Filip

Press release

"We live in a time in which new technologies emerge almost every day and become part of our daily lives more quickly than ever before," says Ludwig Geis, CEO of Hirschmann Car Communication GmbH. "It's very exciting to play a part in these developments. I'm pleased that many young people share our enthusiasm and want to launch their careers at Hirschmann Car Communication."

The company offers its trainees a very comprehensive and varied training programme. "We want not only to offer our trainees solid, practical training but also to fire them with enthusiasm for technology and innovation, and to encourage them to advance the company with their own ideas and initiatives," says Nadin Mohr, Head of Human Resources at Hirschmann Car Communication. "That's why we organise trade fair visits and offer additional training along with social projects and team-building activities to create an open and constructive atmosphere and to improve team spirit."
